What is the difference between AEO and Green Channel Programs?
The Authorised Economic Operator (AEO) Programme is a World Customs Organisation (WCO) tool used to secure and facilitate legitimate trade.

The programme allows customs administrations to enter into strategic agreements with operators who meet certain supply chain security standards and best practices, including compliance to customs laws and regulations. In return, customs offer the companies tangible trade facilitation benefits such as faster clearance times.

AEO is trader specific while Green Channel is tariff based.

The Green Channel framework rides on pre-arrival clearance and has specifications for a post-clearance audit.

The Importance of Green Channel Programs
The Green Channel reduces clearance bottlenecks and ensures faster processing increasing the ease of doing business.

The green channel has created efficiency in the verification procedures.

It increases a company’s integrity and credibility since participation in the Green Channel framework requires tax compliance with no record of fraud-related issues.
